Do breast implants make for better sex? Why love-making is more pleasurable for WOMEN after their enhancement

By VICTORIA WELLMAN

We all know men enjoy a generous chest but a new study claims that women with breast enlargements derive more pleasure in the bedroom than before their enhancements.

Of the women who participated in the online survey by RealSelf.com, 61per cent said they were having more sex. And even more significantly, 70per cent admitted that their sex life satisfaction had improved since their enlargements.

Better? A new study suggests that women like Heidi Montag, pictured before and after her breast augmentation, experience vastly improved sex lives post-op.

Real Self, a 'community for sharing and learning about cosmetic surgeries', conducted the poll over a two week period and asked breast augmentation patients to rate their experiences between the sheets since their operations. The findings showed that those who had undergone enhancements or contouring were able to achieve orgasm more easily and were overall more easily aroused.

More...

The £20 pot of cream that beats a £3,000 laser
Just 25 and beautiful... So why did a cosmetic surgeon tell India she needs Botox?

Dr. Andrew P. Trussler, M.D., a plastic surgeon in the Dallas area, and Plastic Surgery Assistant Professor for the University of Texas told Real Self: 'The poll results are not surprising. I see a transformation in what patients wear and how they carry themselves in the office after having a breast augmentation. 'In my personal observation, women definitely feel more confident after the procedure, and you can easily see how that improved confidence will lead to improvements in other areas of their lives.'

One source who concurred told MailOnline: 'I completely agree with this because if there has always been a part of your body that you've felt self-conscious about while in an intimate situation, then that definitely affects your confidence and therefore ability to relax and enjoy yourself.

'After having gone from an 32A cup to a 32FF, all of a sudden, the part of my body that had always been an embarrassment to me, became something that I was proud of and could feel confident while being with a partner. 'It is not just about the ability to impress a man. It's about feeling self-confident within, which enables you to enjoy a sexual experience more freely and uninhibited.'

Almost one million women in the U.S. have received breast enhancements in the last three years that cost between $6-10,000.

On a scale of 1-10, 28 per cent of the women who took part in the survey admitted that their sex lives had improved by more four points and 7.5 in 10 said the procedure was 'worth it'.

'I don't believe breasts are just for a man's pleasure,' MailOnline's source said. 'If a woman embraces her own body and feels empowered by it, then she will enjoy herself more.'